Individual reflection, week 6 - Carl Lundborg

This week I have finished the second task. This task was done in time and the time estimation was more accurate this time. What I would like to understand better for next week is how the library that I have implemented works. This will be done by taking on a task related to this and work with it continuously.

I have successfully worked with the others in the team in order to finish their merge for the work that they have done. I will continue to show them how my implementations work in relation to theirs. This will be done by continuing to have open conversation with them about how they should do their implementations and perhaps par programming.

My contribution to scrum will be the same as for last week. I have realized that there is many tasks that can be broken down into more manageable tasks, which will be done for the next sprint. This will be done with the same mindset as previous week, by analyzing the tasks and try to estimate how much work each task is.

My contribution to the teams deliveries will continue to be the same as last week. I will try to continue to finish the tasks in time and to meet the KPI criteria. I have now finished a task that actually provide costumer value, which is something I will try to continue doing. I will achieve this by choosing the right tasks for my, and not set the bar to high in order to actually finish something, no matter how small it is.
